In a new interview, Harry Potter author J.K. Rowling admitted that she believes Harry and Hermione would have done a better couple than the heroine and Ron. I wrote the relationship between Hermione and Ron as a form of wish fulfillment, she told Emma Watson in the Sunday Times. That's how it was meant, really. For reasons that have very little to do with literature and much more to do with me clinging to the plot as I first imagined it, Hermione ended up with Ron. Rowling said she knew her change of heart could upset her die-hard fans. I know I'm sorry, I hear the rage and fury it can cause some fans, but if I'm absolutely honest, the distance has given me perspective on this. It was a choice I made for very personal reasons, not for reasons of trust, she said. The author and actress agreed that Harry and Hermione had a better match, with Watson noting that fans questioned the original pairing. I think there are fans out there who know that too, and who wonder whether Ron would really be able to make her happy, Watson said. Image copyright JK Rowling, JK Rowling has responded to criticism of recent comments she made about the transgender community. In a 3,600-word statement, the author stated that her feelings about trans issues stemmed from her experiences of domestic violence and sexual violence. Her comments sparked a heated and angry debate on social media, prompting Harry Potter stars Emma Watson and Daniel Radcliffe to share messages of support for anyone identifying as trans. I mention these things now not in an attempt to garner sympathy, but out of solidarity with the huge number of women who have stories like mine who have been slurred as bigots for having problems around same-sex spaces,' she wrote. Rowling posted a series of tweets on the subject, including one that read: If sex is not real, the living reality of women around the world is erased. I know and love trans people, but erasing the concept of sex eliminates the ability of many people to meaningfully discuss their lives. The author said she was motivated to talk about trans issues after reading about the proposed gender certificate confirmation in Scotland, which would allow trans people to change gender on their birth certificates based on how they identify rather than medical and psychiatric reports. She believes that trans women who have not undergone hormone therapy or surgery should not be allowed to use same-sex spaces. When you throw open the doors of bathrooms and locker rooms for any man who believes or feels that he is a woman - and as I said, gender confirmation certificates can now be provided without any need for surgery or hormones - then you open the door for all and all men who want to come inside. It's a simple truth, she said. She is. said that criticism left her in a very dark place in my head as memories of the serious sexual abuse I suffered in my 20s repeated on a noose. This attack happened at the time, and in a space where I was vulnerable and people capitalized on the opportunity. I couldn't close those memories and I found it hard to contain my anger and frustration at how I believe my government is playing fast and loose with the safety of women and girls. The rare Harry Potter book, handwritten by writer JK Rowling, will be auctioned in London next month - and it will sell at an impressive price. The book, a copy of the spin-off Tales of Edle the Bard, is not only hand-written and illustrated by Rowling, but is also bound by leather and studded with semi-precious stones. It was originally presented to Barry Cunningham, who helped launch Rowling's literary career and published Potter's first novel, Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, in 1997. The handwritten inscription reads: Barry, the man who thought that too long a novel about a boy wizard in glasses can just sell ... Thank you. The manuscript is one of seven unique specimens. Six of them were personally produced by Rowling for close friends, while the seventh was put up for auction, and sold for 1.95 million pounds in 2007. Cunningham's copy is estimated to be between 300,000 and 500,000 pounds. He sells his personalized editions with Rowling's blessing and plans to donate a portion of the profits to her charity Lumos. Sotheby's Personal Resonance of this book makes it as an exceptional and highly desirable object to come to auction. It's special because it's just one of six made for those closest to the author throughout the journey of creating the Harry Potter series, gifted to a man who recognized the brilliance of J.K. Rowling's writing and its potential impact on children's literature,' said Dr Philip W Errington, director of Sotheby's Books and Manuscripts Department. Tales of Edle the Bard is a spin-off of books such as Fantastic Beasts and Where to Find Them. This is the volume of five fairy tales left by Hermione Granger Albus Dumbledore in the seventh and final book. The auction will take place at Sotheby's auction in London on December 13. I know you probably didn't engage in the form of vitriolic, digital harassment that has become synonymous with Twitter, but if you could Take a look at your own tweeting habits and stop tagging J.K. Rowling in your plans for her funeral, which would be great. But no, seriously, J.K. is very annoyed. Got it. Because it's super weird talking to someone about their funeral. Especially when it's someone you don't really know. In the latest bizarre internet meme (though, to be fair, is there any normal?), fans of the Harry Potter series have been tagging author J.K. Rowling's tweets outlining what it will be when she passed away. The most popular variation, which Rowling herself tweeted on February 7, reads: One day in the middle of my life, the headlines will be: J.K. Rowling died today. My children will not fully understand why I left the room and cry, or why I took a book called Harry Potter. Millions will pull out old toy sticks. Cloaks and round rims of glasses will be dusted off. Sticks are on fire, they take to the streets, holding them high. From speakers and phones, 'Hedwig's theme.' Hogwarts will come back to life as a new generation is introduced into the Boy Who Lived. Without even addressing this in great detail imagining Rowling's death, this meme suggests Harry Potter is on the road to obsolescence for future generations, frankly, a little silly. I work in a bookstore. I can attest to the fact that sensitive teenagers continue to worship the boy who lived. So, yes, it's clear that Rowling was a little unsettled. Especially when, despite her requests, people continued to badger her. And molest her. (Her response to this Scottish journalist, by the way, was 'You're OK, David, I know what happened. And in general annoying. So, fam, let's put it down. Or at least fire trying to insert J.K. Rowling into her plans for her death. Chill. Skip navigation! John Phillips/Getty Images As the highest paid author in the world, J.K. Rowling makes more money a day than most people make in a year. The Creator of Harry Potter made about 74 million pounds in the year ending May 31, 2018, and online retailer Wordery smashed that down into its monthly, daily and hourly earnings. According to the website, Rowling earns about 6,190,042 pounds a day, which is 203,508 pounds per day; 8,480 euros each hour; or an incredible 142 euros per minute. Wordery has gone even further and produced an online tool that also works out how long it will take the author to earn an annual salary (which is incredibly depressing but strangely compelling). Authors usually don't choose a career in writing for huge profits, fame or wealth, but writers like JK Rowling have also become known as they wrote the characters for, said Wordery spokesman Barry Magennis. Rowling has published seven Harry Potter novels and several spin-offs, spin-offs. The manuscript of the play for the West End hit Harry Potter and the Cursed Child, and the guidebook Fantastic Beasts and Where to Find Them, which has since been turned into a blockbuster film franchise starring Eddie Redmayne and Johnny Depp. According to the Sunday Times Rich List for 2018, Rowling's net worth is estimated at about 700 million. She famously lost her status as a billionaire because of the amount of money she donated to charity.
